

Three circular wax seals are arranged horizontally against a dark background. Each seal is made of dark brown wax and features an embossed design, likely a coat of arms. The seals are attached to a piece of aged, light-colored parchment or paper that is visible at the top. The paper has three vertical strips of tape or glue holding it in place. The seals show signs of wear, including cracking and discoloration. The central seal is slightly more worn than the others. The rightmost seal has a small, light-colored, triangular object attached to its right side.
