The Persian Gulf.

Wesley 1972

67 Des. 71 SA check Over again.

The Gulf: implications of British withdrawal, Wesley 1969 (The Centre for Strategic and International Studies) Fund Report, Series no. 8.

- 11 Emphasis: "One of these processes is a move toward full independence for the Gulf states, either through a revolution, or independence, and any attempt by the rulers, particularly the ruler of Bahrain, to halt this move could increase the dangers to the stability of their regions. Independence would lead to membership in the Arab League and this in turn could almost certainly preclude the continued presence of British gulf forces; to ignore Arab opinion on this subject would be to invite the involvement of British forces in an Adler-type situation, with all its disastrous consequences. A modification of the present policy would therefore mean the negotiation of new defence arrangements, including possibly a British amphibious force, with gulf facilities maintained also, necessary by the federal or local powers."
- 12

74 "The (Persian Gulf) the main requirement is a liberalization of the present autocratic regime and a change in direction away from the Gulf states another factor is to be avoided."
